For severely tailored wear the waistcoat that has no back, or just a skeleton back, is often chosen because in heavy materials such an arrangement is cool, but collar and yoke and a wide girdle or strap running all the way round the waist hold these waistcoats in place. The models in white pique, single or double breasted and sometimes cased a little, like a blouse, into a wide slightly fitted girdle. are especially liked. Corded white silk is made up in the same way and in some cases it has its edges bordered by bands of color, but the white pique is smartest when absolutely plain. For sports wear leather, both suede and smooth finish, is built up into waistcoats, but these, of course, are very warm. The softer, thinner chemisettes are those that are most interesting and most charming, and in these, as has been said before, there is amazing variety, despite the necessary limitations of line.
